My family, my Native heritage, and my experiences at NMMI have shaped the person I am today. They have taught me perseverance, responsibility, and the importance of helping others. I am proud of where I come from, grateful for the opportunities I have been given, and determined to use my education to make a positive impact on both my community and the people around me. This fall, I plan to attend Texas Tech University and pursue a Bachelor of Business Administration in Finance. My interest in finance comes directly from the experiences I had growing up. Watching my family struggle financially made me curious about personal finance and determined to understand how people can avoid those hardships. My long-term goal is to become a financial advisor and eventually open my own financial advising firm. I want to help individuals and families make informed financial decisions, build wealth, and create more opportunities for themselves and future generations.
