

Alana

Growing up in small town South Dakota, near the Rosebud Indian reservation, has given me the roots and knowledge of the cultural differences that my heritage has, which will carry me throughout life. I am a proudly enrolled tribal member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. Being an educated adult, who is closely and wisely watching and learning from the world around me, I understand that who I am is a significant milestone in history and a huge step towards positive change for future generations to come. I have discovered that I am passionate about contributing to the medical field to ensure that patient safety and care are top priorities. At the hospital, my desire to learn and to grow in my position sparked. I always knew that I carried a special gift that allows me to connect with individuals from different backgrounds, socioeconomic statuses, ethnicities, and those who are on an unusual life journey. Upon making those connections, I also realized that I have a passion for helping individuals reach their fullest potential